2003 ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING REVIEW

1/3 Delegates from across the continent attended Tennis Europe's Annual General Meeting, which was excellently organised by the Italian Tennis Federation, with special thanks to Mr. Michele Brunetti, who worked tirelessly to ensure many memorable settings for both the

1/2 work sessions and the social programme, as well as ensuring an enjoyable time for the delegates' companions.

Agustin Pujol of Spain, President of the European Tennis Association from 2000-2002, was the most decorated delegate in Ancona, collecting three Tennis Europe Trophies (amongst them the overall award), a Player of the Year accolade for Marcel Granollers, and an Honorary Life Presidency award for his services to T-ennis Europe.

INTERVIEW WITH ITF PRESIDENT

8 Tennis Europe News managed to have a few words with the President of the International Tennis Federation, Francesco Ricci Bitti during the AGM. Mr. Ricci Bitti has been heavily involved in Tennis Europe's activities for over 25 years, culminating with his Presidency of the organisation from 1993-1999.

9 We spoke to him about his ITF Presidency and general matters for European Tennis, shortly after his speech to the assembly on the second day of the meeting.

So, four years (and counting) as President of the ITF. What have been the greatest challenges, both on a personal level, and for the organisation as a whole under your leadership?

There are many. On a professional level, I'm especially pleased that we have managed to maintain ITF activities despite a substantial decrease in available resources (cont'd Page 2)

FRANCESCO RICCI BITTI

The success of the international team competitions, especially the Davis Cup, in the past two or three years has been remarkable. I'm also very pleased by the progression of Olympic tennis, and look forward to the most successful competition yet at the Athens games.

On a personal level, I would say the hardest thing has been the travelling, constantly on the move to meetings...it's much tougher physically than I would have expected. I'm often surprised as well at how much of my business experience I have to rely on; before taking office I expected to use it of course, but I imagined I would be drawing mainly on my tennis experience.

European nations have performed especially well in the team events in the last couple of years. Are you happy with the current state of Davis & Fed Cups? What needs to be done to strengthen the Fed Cup in particular?

Well, the Davis Cup has historically been very evenly balanced between Europe and the rest of the world. Europe has many very good players right now who can be called upon to make formidable teams. The Fed Cup is also gaining popularity. Mainly it has suffered from a lack of stability. It needs to settle into a stable format, with good player participation - which in the first round this year has been exceptional, and have a dependable schedule that players can build their commitments around. Once we've achieved those aims, there should be no problem to find long-term partners for the event.

Last time we spoke to you, you were saying that you wanted to strengthen the ITF/Grand Slam relationship and also that you wanted to work more closely with the ATP and WTA. How do you think that has evolved?

Well firstly, the relationship between the ITF and the Grand Slams is even better than I could have expected. The same can be said of our cooperation with the ATP and WTA, with whom we work very closely and successfully on a number of issues, such as the anti-doping programme. It's not always an easy relationship; we are partners in some things and counter-parts in others, but it's always a very positive relationship, even when we have different agendas.

What's your reaction to reports that the ATP is seeking to claim a bigger Grand Slam payout?

I think that this all stems from the inherent difficulties of the business model of the tours. It is always going to be difficult to be both union of the players and representative of the tournaments. The player is the entertainer, and the tournament is the provider of the money, and to speak for both of those entities at once is of course not easy. It's a difficult situation, and many tournaments on the circuit are simply not profitable. It's normal to seek alternative methods of obtaining funds in such a situation. The Grand Slams are able to grow and to offer increased prize money each year, as well as provide additional funds for us for the development of the game, precisely because they are not a part of this equation.

Over the last year, we have seen a number of progressions in the fight against drugs in tennis. Are you happy that enough is being done?

I'm very happy, yes. The ITF has been working jointly with the ATP and WTA since the mid 1980's, and few sports control their domain as effectively as tennis. The Copenhagen conference earlier this year illustrated that we are amongst the leaders in sport in this field, and our efforts in co-operation with WADA is to look for greater harmonisation of rules and procedures.

If we turn to 'Marketing the Game' initiatives, the ITF has recently launched the ITN (International Tennis Number) for rating players. How successful has it been so far?

We've had a good response. It's an especially good system for countries that do not have a national ratings system, which was why we launched the pilot scheme in Australia. People there have been very enthusiastic about it. It's a very simple system, and easy to adopt in conjunction with the many different national systems. We need to take a look now at which countries to concentrate on next.

Tennis Europe, in conjunction with the ITF, has just launched the See Tennis Live campaign; what is your reaction to it?

It's a great way of giving some identity to the efforts of national associations and individual tennis clubs to promote their smaller tournaments. There are so many events, over 1300 weeks in Europe this year at all levels, so it's good to have a common promotional approach for a lot of those events. It's a very good package, and an innovative implementation but we'll have to wait and study the feedback from the users.

Mr. Ricci Bitti; Tennis Europe News thanks you for your time.

2003 ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING IN ANCONA, ITALY: REVIEW

Delegates from all over Europe headed to Italy at the beginning of May for 2003 Annual General Meeting. The Adriatic port of Ancona hosted the two-day meeting, during which many key issues were discussed, reports given and sea foods consumed.

Friday's opening session at the historic Palazzo degli Anziani was divided between discussion of the See Tennis Live project, and the European Team Championships. Olli Mäenpää, Anders Wennberg and Juan Maria Tintoré Belil gave presentations concerning the See Tennis Live campaign, during which the delegates were asked to support the scheme in their native countries, and were given instructions on how to use the marketing material that has been provided by Tennis Europe for entry-level events across the continent.

After a break Tennis Europe President John James gave an impassioned speech about the European Team Championships before the delegates divided into three working groups to discuss suggestions for the future of the event.

The Italian Tennis Federation hosted the official dinner on Friday night at the Restaurant Passetto. The meal was followed by a ceremony during which the annual awards were presented. Amongst these were the 2002 Tennis Europe Trophies. The most decorated nation this year was Spain with three trophies, including the Overall title. Agustin Pujol, the President of the Spanish Tennis Federation, collected the awards, and remarked that he took extra pride in the first Spanish European Junior Tennis Trophy.

Special Tennis Europe awards were then presented to Todor Todorov and Walter Goethals for their services to European Tennis over the years. Mr Goethals has served as the General Secretary of the Belgian Tennis Federation for the last twenty years, attending all Top Executive and Annual general Meetings in that time. Mr Todorov (pictured) is a member of the board of the Bulgarian Tennis Federation, and is serving his twentieth year as a member of the Junior Committee.

The delegates retired early on Friday night in order to prepare for Saturday's Plenary Session, which was opened by the Mayor of the city, who presented a commemorative gift to the presidents of Tennis Europe and the ITF.

Mario Pescante, President of the European National Olympic Committees and Vice Minister of Sports in Italy, who spoke via videoconference from Rome, then greeted the delegates. Roberto Lombardi of the Italian Tennis Federation followed, with an entertaining presentation on the success of their training scheme for coaches.

ITF President Francesco Ricci Bitti then addressed the assembly with a speech concentrating largely on financial matters. Afterwards he took questions from the delegates on a variety of matters. The rest of the day was given over to the traditional matters of the Annual General Meeting; the presentations of the various committees, and Players of the Year awards.

After another memorable dinner, which had been preceded by a 'tribute to Tennis Europe concert', featuring performances by a string quartet and a selection of opera pieces, the meeting was finally over, with the symbolic passing of the Tennis Europe flag from Mr. Brunetti to Spiros Zannias, the President of the Greek Tennis Federation. John James had announced earlier in the day that Greece had accepted his invitation to stage the AGM in Athens in 2004, their Olympic year. The delegates then dispersed; some eager to take the opportunity to catch up with colleagues over a beer in one of the many open-air bars, others off for a few hours sleep before commencing their return journeys to the four corners of the continent.

Tennis Europe would like to thank once again Mr. Brunetti and the Italian Tennis Federation, and we look forward to seeing all the delegates again next year in Greece.

TENNIS TO FEATURE AT SPECIAL OLYMPICS

Tennis is one of the sports that will be featured at the 2003 Special Olympics World Summer Games being held June 21-29, 2003 in Dublin, Ireland. The World Games, with 7,000 athletes with mental handicaps competing in 21 sports, will be the largest sporting event in the world this year.

In total, 135 players from 30 countries will be competing in tennis with 50 players from 12 countries coming from Europe. Athletes will participate in individual skills assessment and compete in Singles, Doubles and Mixed Doubles. "We will see a wide range of abilities: from athletes who are learning to hit a ball to competing players who can sustain an extended rally and controlled forehand and backhand shots," said Eileen Stapleton, World Games general manager, sports.

The David Lloyd Riverview Club in Dublin will host the World Games practice and competition. The club offers first-class facilities including 11 indoor courts that will be for the exclusive use of Special Olympics athletes during the Games. The venue has been used for a number of national and international tennis events, including rounds of the Davis Cup.

During the competition, eight ITF international officials will be on hand, complemented by 16 Irish officials. Forty-eight ball boys/girls from the local community will be selected and trained.

DEVELOPMENT OFFICER UPDATE

ITF/TENNIS EUROPE NORTH EAST TRAINING CAMP

The ITF/Tennis Europe training camp for 14 & Under in north east Europe was held for the third successive year in Siauliai, Lithuania from 9-16 March. Thirty-two players and 12 coaches from Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, the Ukraine and Belarus were invited to attend the camp. The beautiful Siauliai Tennis School with 6 indoor courts, fitness and lecture room is excellently equipped for the project like this. The camp was conducted by Hrvoje Zmajic, ITF/Tennis Europe Development Officer together with the coaches from each of invited countries.

Players and coaches were involved in both on-court and off-court training sessions. The main objectives of the training camp were to improve tactical skills and better understanding of the tennis game.

The training camp provides players and coaches from the region with a rare opportunity not only to work and train together but also to exchange their opinions and information.

ITF/TENNIS EUROPE DEVELOPMENT CHAMPIONSHIPS, NOVI SAD

The 9th ITF/Tennis Europe Development Championships is being hosted for the first time by the Yugoslavian Tennis Federation in Novi Sad.

Sixteen East European countries were invited to participate and sent their best players to compete in this 16 & Under European Junior Tour events. The Championships consisted of two tournaments in which a feed-in consolation format has been used, which guarantees that players take part in at least one single match per day.

Based on the combined results from both Tournaments the best players will be awarded travel grants aimed at helping them to take part in high-level Junior tournaments around the world. This will enable them to gain the international experience that is crucial for their future development. The championships are in their final stages as we go to press; results updates can be found on our website.

1ST EUROPEAN UNIVERSITIES TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIPS

The first European Universities Tennis Championships will be held in Cyprus next month, hosted by the Cyprus University Sports Federation, with the cooperation of the Cyprus Tennis Federation.

The tournament will be held at the National Tennis Centre in Nicosia between 21st and 28th June, and will see both men's and women's teams competing.

For further information, please visit the web sites of the European University Sports Association (www.eusa-unisport.org), or the Cyprus University Sports Federation (www.cusf.org.cy), who have all the participation details including entry forms, deadlines, regulations and the event programme.

2003 SMALL STATES CHAMPIONSHIPS

In recent years these championships have become one of the most important events on the junior calendar for the players from the Small States of Europe.

This year the event was held in the Luxembourg National Training Centre at Esch-Alzette, where sixteen girls and sixteen boys from Albania, Andorra, Azerbaijan, Cyprus, Iceland, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malta and San Marino battled hard throughout eight days of competition. The matches were played in a very positive and competitive atmosphere, and the event was organised excellently by the national association.

The final ranking is determined by using a feed-in consolation system in which all players have to play singles and doubles matches each day.

In the boys event Matthew Asciak and Georgios Koshis dominated both tournaments. Georgios won in the final of the first tournament against Matthew, who exacted his revenge and won the second tournament against Georgios.

As with the boys event, Stephanie Vogt and Elina Hasanova played the finals in both girls tournaments and won respectively one of them.

Hrvoje Zmajic, ITF/Tennis Europe Development Officer commented: "This year the best players came from Cyprus, Liechtenstein, Malta and Azerbaijan, unlike the years before when the competition has been dominated by one or two countries. This is a sign that in recent years the standard of tennis has developed across the European Small States."

Based on the combined results from two tournaments the players featured below will be invited to participate in the ITF/Tennis Europe Small States Team that will travel under the direction of Gitanas Mazonas of Lithuania, and afterwards will participate in three tournaments part of 2003 European 14 & Under Junior Tour, as illustrated.

JUNIOR TOUR SUPERVISOR UPDATE

On the European Junior Tour, as everywhere else in tennis, March and April are months of transition, which represent the end of the indoor and beginning of the outdoor seasons.

The Winter Cup finals, held in various locations across the continent, mark the conclusion of the indoor season. I had the possibility to visit both the U14 boys final in San Miniato as well as the U16 boys final in Montecatini. San Miniato saw the triumph of the Belgian team over the Czech Republic, while in the final at Montecatini Russia defeated Spain in front of a full crowd. The teams were very happy about their presence in Tuscany and were catered for well with hospitality, a good venue and general conditions of play. My outdoor season started the week before Easter with a visit to Livorno and a short trip to Anderlecht. The eight courts of Livorno were the frame of one of the top Under 14 events in Europe. Although the weather caused some problems for the finals, the tournament ran smoothly throughout the week. Only 15 minutes by car separate Anderlecht from Bruxelles airport, which makes this tournament very convenient for players coming from all over Europe.

I was particularly impressed by the off court social activities which kept the players occupied for the rest of their days when not involved in matches or practice.

After the Easter break I went to Pavia, a small city close to Milan, where Tennis Club Pavia hosted an Under 14 category 3 event for the first time.

Although the club had only forty days to organise the event, replacing Genova at the last minute, they committed themselves impressively and pleased players and coaches alike with a high level tournament, full of social activities.

The next two months see some of the most important Under 16 and Under 14 tournaments on the calendar, from where I will update you in the next issue. (Massimo Morelli)

TENNIS EUROPE AND TENNISPLANET.COM LAUNCH NEW VENTURE

Tennis Europe's European Junior Tour recently launched a cooperation with TennisPlanet, Europe's biggest mail order company for tennis products.

Who is TennisPlanet?

TennisPlanet has been in business for 15 years and sells over 1000 different tennis products throughout the entire of Europe. TennisPlanet publishes a 75-page full color catalogue twice a year and has an online shop at www.TennisPlanet.com.

In 2001 Paul Haarhuis (pictured), the successful Dutch doubles player, became the co-owner of TennisPlanet. He also started playing with Tyger rackets, the brand for which TennisPlanet has the exclusivity for Europe.

Since then, the company has been growing rapidly and is now active in various countries. The main office is located in Eindhoven, the Netherlands. This ideal location with superb logistic infrastructure enables TennisPlanet to deliver to customers in The Netherlands, Germany and Austria directly. The Belgian and French markets are supplied from the office and warehouse in Gent. In countries such as Sweden, Denmark, Switzerland and Italy, TennisPlanet works together with local distributors that operate in the same way and with the same magazine and website.

What does the cooperation mean?

With this cooperation Tennis Europe and TennisPlanet join forces to establish a better relationship with junior players.
